KRISTIN SCOTT THOMAS

If anyone can make being holed up in the back of a cab for an hour feel glamorous, it's Kristin Scott Thomas. Not that she would necessarily thank you for the compliment, for neither a conqueror nor a goddess she. Indeed, she is agreeably rough, funny, thoughtful, honest and seemingly unafraid of anything – certainly not of speaking her mind. The glamour is partly to do with her unstinting beauty, but she also has that luminosity that only real stars radiate. When she removes her sunglasses, you practically gasp – the planes and angles of her face are so familiar, albeit chiselled by time. The 54-year-old's eyes crinkle wonderfully at the edges when she laughs, which is often.

She doesn't pretend to be unsure about her looks. 'Of course I care. But I'm not going to spend my life worrying, because there are better things to do, and I could spend hours and thousands of pounds having injections, but I'm not sure it gives the required effect. If I could find a surgeon who could make me look exactly like I did – not even ten years younger, but at 46, 47, 48... that's when I looked the best – I would go for it.'

She quotes a line from her new film, My Old Lady, an adaptation of the Israel Horovitz play the old lady in question is Maggie Smith and Scott Thomas plays her daughter, opposite Kevin Kline): 'I'm not beautiful, I'm nearly old' – omitting Kline's rejoinder that it is at precisely that point that a flower, just before the fading of its bloom, is at its most beautiful.

I had arrived early at the white stucco mansion Scott Thomas is renting in Little Venice. She emerged in relaxed, hipsterish attire: skinny jeans tucked into low-heeled black suede boots, a loose grey beanie covering her hair, leather bag slung across her chest. If she was wearing make-up, it was very minimal indeed.

A few nights earlier, sitting in the audience at The Old Vic, I had been faced with a very different Scott Thomas. The actress had a filthy, chalky face, matted hair standing up in awkward tufts; feverish hands clutching her ripped, sweat-stained baggy dress; hunchbacked, with pink-rimmed eyes. She was playing the title role of Electra, for which she has been much acclaimed, in a version of the Sophocles play by Frank McGuinness, who calls it the female Hamlet. At its simplest, the work revolves around Electra's grief and avenging anger after the murder of her father Agamemnon by her mother Clytemnestra (played by Diana Quick) and her lover Aegisthus. Electra waits long, barren years for her missing brother Orestes to return and make his bloody amends.

It is, to put it mildly, intense. From the moment Electra runs on to the dirt-strewn floor (the play is staged in the round), she shrieks and wrests, gasps and roars, the performance is a tour de force. What Scott Thomas loves about the play is that 'Sophocles was so clever at reproducing and understanding human behaviour... the

DO YOU FANCY A DATE?

WARNING IT WILL BE ON MY TERMS

At 22, she was one of the founders of Tinder, the only female on the team. But after a sexual harassment lawsuit, Whitney Wolfe walked away. Now she's back with a rival dating app – and this time it's the women who are in control.
