Sally Hawkins... (...we love you!)

By Daisy Lowe photography: Thomas Eye

Sally Hawkins is inspired by the great artists.

Art, Hepburn and Olsen and Bergman. Not the lens of the silver screen, or even the red carpet effort works for the walls of the flat and the ROMA. It's the artists that Sally can't get off her mind a whimsical summer reading list as the ones that light every child's imagination.

"Maurice Sendak, Quentin Tarentino, Road Dahl... they're my heroes, really. I grew into it a great story. It's not too young age." When you consider the fact that she grew up in the creative household, the daughter of two children's book creators, it's not surprising. The pen-friend for the creative, never left her. It became her view of the world. "You know, the value of art -- he knows nothing else really -- it gives you a way to express yourself. I found it so easy to do. It's the language for me." Children's books and literature offer a different take on the world. Not the usual structure of adulthood where emotions are often hidden or tucked away. "They're much more honest and they give the freedom for incredible creativity, which is being honest. Usually the most life-affirming and heart-repairing stories and books are artwork. I find them visually uplifting and inspiring like the Bluebird. I stumbled across them at the time Book Stop in New York years ago and I just felt so deeply in love with them."

Sally's work often reflects the appreciation of the finest creativity in a good storybook. Whether she's playing a mum worried being in bed with a monster, a heady-go-lucky school teacher, or the loopy mother of a remarkable talking bear. Her roles are on the quirky side. "It's more to do with what I've chosen to make them to do with who I am. I find those characters more interesting. I'm just more interested in people that maybe don't quite fit."

"... You know, the value of art -- he knows nothing else really -- it gives you a way to express yourself. I found it so easy to do. It's the language for me..."
